HISTORY OF ONE YEAR IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

CHRONOLOGICAL REVIEW WHICH COVERS BOTH THE LOCAL FIELD AND THE WORLD AT LARGE

The first year of the twentieth century was an eventful one for Trenton in many respects.

It was a year of almost unequalled prosperity both in mills and workshops of the city and on the farms in the immediately surrounding districts. Some rural crops did not turn out as well as growers hoped but high prices and abundance of product in most lines made up to the farmers for all deficiencies.

The twelve months just closed brought their share of public weal and woe. There were numerous occasions for general rejoicing and frequent times when sorrow ruled the people.

In the line of casualties the disaster to the City of Trenton was, perhaps, the most severe. Nearly a score of people lost their lives and as many more were injured. The wreck of the Nellie Bly express train was another accident which blighted many homes and cast gloom in many families.

Three murders attracted the attention of the civil authorities. The victims were Thomas F. Applegate, Mrs. John P. Murphy and John Kraus. The latter crime has been confessed by a man now awaiting trial. The Murphy tragedy is said to have not been premeditated and the man accused of killing Applegate is serving a term in jail, in spite of his protestations of innocence.

There was one hanging---that of Robert Hensen, for the murder of Mary Van Lieu and her child. Numerous crimes of lesser degree have been ferreted out by the police and punished in the courts.

A general strike among the building trades created considerable confusion in industrial lines but many important improvements have been made notwithstanding. The new court house has been started, the crematory built, the public library about completed, numerous manufacturing plants have been enlarged and many private dwellings erected.

The death of United States Senator William J. Sewell has stirred the Republican party of the whole state and the election of a Democratic mayor and tax receiver in the city has still further agitated the politicians. Fire Chief McGill and the Rev. Father Dunphy were among the prominent public men who died during the year.

The investigation at the asylum created general discussion but failed to pan out as the agitators had expected. The celebration of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the battle of Trenton was an event that attracted attention throughout the country.
